Method of preparation	Take Ksheera in a vessel and heat it gently over a low heat while continuously stirring with a ladle. This initial stage is considered the first type of Ksheerapaka. When the milk is further reduced to half or one-third of its original quantity, it is termed Lehya. After reduction to one-sixth of its original quantity, it is known as Ghatika, and when reduced to one-eighth, it is referred to as Sharkara. Each of these four preparations should be collected separately in individual vessels. Specific fruits and flowers are to be added to each type as follows: • Ksheerapaka (first type): Add small pieces of Ardraka along with aromatic flowers such as Jati and others. • Lehya (second type): Incorporate Kharjura and flowers of Punnaga. • Ghatika (third type): Add Amraphala, Ghṛita, Madhu, flowers of Dadima and cooked rice. • Sharkara (fourth type): Add Kadaliphala, Sharkara, flowers of Punnaga, Karpura and Kasturi Before serving, all floral components should be carefully removed from the milk preparations to enhance palatability.
Properties	Madhura (sweet), guru (heavy to digest) , sheeta (cold in potency)
